Mad About Plaid Jill McElmurry 2020-06-02 From the illustrator of the best-selling Little Blue Truck series comes the whimsical tale of Madison Pratt, a clever and spunky girl determined to reverse the curse of the plaid purse. Madison Pratt is delighted to find a lonely plaid purse in the park one afternoon. It's just the fashion statement she's been looking for. Until—oh no! The plaid begins to spread. It crawls up Madison's sleeve, over her jacket, and under her hat. The purse's mad curse causes Madison—and her whole neighborhood—to turn plaid! Will Madison's spunk and optimism help to reverse the curse before it's too late?

About Now Joanne Kyger 2007 Poetry. For decades, Joanne Kyger has played a crucial role in California's poetry scene. Her poetry has been influenced by her studies in Zen Buddhism and her connection to the poets of Black Mountain, the San Francisco Renaissance, and the Beat Generation. Ron Silliman describes Kyger's poetry as a point of convergence for all "post-avant" literary tendencies the later half of the 20th Century: "You can hear her influence everywhere, from Naropa, to the later generations of the New York School, to Language poetry. Get a fix on Joanne Kyger and a half century of American poetry suddenly comes clearly into focus." This latest collection may serve as the definitive one, highlighting an excellent sampling of her work.

"Fortress Europe" and Other Myths about Trade Jean Baneth 1993 An export-oriented development strategy has long formed a main thrust of the World Bank's advice to developing countries. This paper sets out to examine whether one of the essential preconditions for successful implementation of that advice is valid: whether industrial countries are open to developing countries' exports. On the basis of what happened to merchandise trade in the 1980s, it concludes that markets were indeed free to imports of manufactures; protectionism was largely a myth. This paper is a revised version of work first published as WPS1098. This revised version takes a somewhat more intensive look at the interactions of trade, growth, and employment in the industrial countries. It concludes that this has not been as smooth and problem-free as some enthusiastic advocates of free trade would have it. During a period of low investment and low growth, some of the potential benefits of free trade cannot be captured, while some of its costs can be immediately felt; when the most intensive competition comes from relatively low wage countries, its impact is most directly felt by labor. In such circumstances, the political attractiveness of protectionism can become huge. However, the paper decisively rejects that route. Protectionism, it argues, would veil real problems, and at best, offer a placebo for real difficulties. Industrial economies, the paper concludes, should not try to hide from competition, but improve their ability to meet it.

Something to Cry About Susan M. Turner 2002-01-17 While many parents and teachers believe it's okay to spank or physically punish their children in some manner to improve behavior the author believes otherwise. She explores the historical, psychological, sociological and legal foundations from a philosophical perspective presenting evidence showing that all forms of corporal punishment pose significant risks for children and that none improves behavior in the long term.

Sincerely, Your Autistic Child Autistic Women and Nonbinary Network 2021-03-30 A diverse collection of autistic voices that highlights how parents can avoid common mistakes and misconceptions, and make their child feel truly accepted, valued, and celebrated for who they are. Most resources available for parents come from psychologists, educators, and doctors, offering parents a narrow and technical approach to autism. Sincerely, Your Autistic Child represents an authentic resource for parents written by autistic people themselves. From childhood and education to culture, gender identity, and sexuality, this anthology tackles the everyday joys and challenges of growing up while honestly addressing the emotional needs, sensitivity, and vibrancy of autistic kids, youth, and young adults. Contributors reflect on what they have learned while growing up on the autism spectrum and how parents can avoid common mistakes and overcome challenges while raising their child. Part memoir, part guide, and part love letter, Sincerely, Your Autistic Child is an indispensable collection that invites parents and allies into the unique and often unheard experiences of autistic children and teens.

Arguing about Gods Graham Oppy 2006-09-04 In this book, Graham Oppy examines arguments for and against the existence of God. He shows that none of these arguments is powerful enough to change the minds of reasonable participants in debates on the question of the existence of God. His conclusion is supported by detailed analyses of the arguments as well as by the development of a theory about the purpose of arguments and the criteria that should be used in judging whether or not arguments are successful. Oppy discusses the work of a wide array of philosophers, including Anselm, Aquinas, Descartes, Locke, Leibniz, Kant, Hume and, more recently, Plantinga, Dembski, White, Dawkins, Bergman, Gale and Pruss.

What I Like About Me! Teacher Edition Allia Zobel Nolan 2005-10-25 The kids in What I Like About Me, are as different as night and day. And, guess what? They love it. Some adore the fact that their braces dazzle and gleam, others feel distinguished when they wear their glasses. This fun-loving book, with a mirror included on the last page, proves to kids that, in a world where fitting in is the norm, being different is what makes us special. Helping children learn about diversity, while fostering self-esteem, is what this super-sized Teacher Classroom Pack is all about. Teachers can read the rhyming text of the award-winning What I Like About Me! and use the oversized book to focus on differences in nationality, appearance, food, and more. Inviting children to look in the giant mirror will encourage them to think and talk about what they like best about themselves.
